

Pa had reminded you to be back by supper time. Once a year, you get to visit the Timber State park. Every year you try to find a new place to explore. While playing a game of hide and seek, you found the prefect cave.

In the cave, you noticed that it was actually much deeper than it looked from the outside. Winding down the dark path, the darkness almost made you turn back, when you suddenly saw something ever so small. At first, you thought it was perhaps a firefly, but then you remembered fireflies didn't live in this park. The light brightened as you moved further down the path of the cave. When you reached the light you blinked a few times, emerging into a lush green field.

The field was nothing like the forest that you had just left. You actually don't remember any land this open anywhere near the forest. Not only that, you are very sure that there wasn't a castle anywhere near the camping site.

A castle! You have some time before anyone will miss you. There's another dirt road that also looks inviting.
